The courts are punishing Microsoft, a winner and rewarding the losers who have inferior products in my estimation. What is wrong with winning? I don't see Be on every desktop and Oracle is so expensive and cumbersome that only foolish bureaucracies run this software. There are no gains for the general population which this lawsuit pretends to "protect". Very clearly the courts are protecting a very few major corporations and their interests, not us little guys. And guess what ? should anyone be surprised - There are several technical references about computer systems and software that are grievously incorrect in the court documents.

Since when does any company have to get approval from the courts to bring a product to market? Courts have to get out of the market place. Let winners win, and losers lose. Get Bin Laden and others like him. Get bad guys not a company like Microsoft whom we all should be proud of. We should put a statue of Bill Gates right next to the Abe Lincoln monument.

Our future is in our children. Any court settlement (not), if there has to be one should benefit our kids.
